We all go through rough times and most of us find the strength to deal with passing rough times. Sometimes, because of bad luck, poor choices, or countless other reasons, we may need a little more help.

Places like the Boston Rescue Mission, are able to step in assist individuals who have fallen into homelessness. Boston Rescue Mission has historically received strong support from the community. Volunteers do activities as seemingly small as dropping by with food, or serving meals. These gestures are anything but small. There are many people in Massachusetts that are such volunteers. They may even help people in need nearby without even thinking about it. People do these things because they care. "Caring gives us ALL the strength TO DO, and do TO DO again everyday. "We see so many examples of this kind of strength at Boston Rescue Mission; they inspire us" states Kathryn Soderberg, CPCU president of Soderberg Insurance Services.

Soderberg hosts an annual food drive from October 1st thru December 31st. For every policy quoted, the agency made a financial donation to this homeless shelter in Boston that has been helping the homeless for over 100 years. "Volunteerism is critical, but places like Boston Rescue Mission also need financial support." Soderberg adds "it gives us great pleasure to support this worthy charity on behalf of our clients."
